Line 12: Civil society, collective action and development

Contributions in this line can deal with the role of civil society starting from their diverse local, state and transnational manifestations, with a special focus on the interactions with structures, dynamics and social, political, economic and cultural actors. In this sense, the following topics could be covered: the approach on the role and participation of civil society in processes of elaboration, implementation and control of public policies; the capacity of influence or advocacy in decision forums and spaces, especially in international governance and the 2030 Agenda; the transformation and interaction through social networks and information and communications technologies (ICTs); as well as the participation in the generation of knowledge that, from praxis, from the construction of narratives and discourses, or from the actions driven towards the determination of the public agenda, strengthens, widens or critically questions the notion and the practice of development.
